Introduction

This is a basic article document. This is my standard document that I like to use that doesn't look too LATEX-ey. The table of contents (TOC) for this document updates automatically as long as you use the proper section labels.

A subsection

This is a subsection. This template currently features sections, subsections, and subsubsections (H1, H2, and H3).

A subsubsection

This is a subsubsection; this is the third level heading.

This is an example of a basic table.

A	Header	Row
A	normal	row
A	normal	row
A	normal	row

This is another section

I like to put each sentence of a document on its own line. I think it makes it easier to edit the document later. LATEXignores single line breaks and puts the sentences together into paragraphs.

Include an empty line between sentences to start a new paragraph. Here are some examples of other writing elements you might want to use in a document.
